

ABSTRACT

A method of forming a microlens, comprising providing a doped glass having at least one metallic component other than copper, and locally irradiating the doped glass by a continuous wave laser beam, so as to melt a portion of the doped glass, thereby to form the microlens.